Chapter 1: Essay Answer Key

Question 1

- Couples often wait to receive counseling until their problems are severe.
- Many couples have a long history of problems.
- Couples often develop destructive patterns of behavior.
- Couples often argue in the counseling session.
- Couples are more different than ever before.
- The relationship between the counselor and couple is more complex.

Question 2

- Counselors are expected to keep the confidences of their clients, yet there is an ethical dilemma when a client divulges something such as a sexual affair in their relationship and wishes to keep it secret from their partner.

- Record-keeping most often becomes an ethical issue in couples work when the couple divorces and one member requests their joint folder to use as ammunition in the upcoming legal proceedings.
- Because the relationship between couple and counselor predicts a positive outcome, therapists must stay on top of our attitudes and ruptures in the relationship, or we are not doing the best for our clients.
- In some states, case notes require that every client have a diagnosis and a prognosis.
- A dilemma arises when the therapist sees a relationship as damaged beyond repair and the clients want to stay together in a destructive relationship.

Question 3

- Marriage rates have fallen.
- People are getting married later.
- Why we marry has changed.
- How we marry has changed.
- Divorce rates are high.
- Cohabitation is increasing.
- Same-sex marriage is legal.

Question 4

- A belief in relative versus absolute truth
- My partner is my friend and is on my team.
- Ability to deal with conflict
- A belief in something larger

Question 5

1. Consolidating psychological separation and establishing new connections with the family of origin
2. Building the couple identity—togetherness versus autonomy
3. Establishing the sexual identity of the couple
4. Establishing the marriage as a zone of safety and nurturing
5. Parenthood
6. Building a relationship that is fun and interesting

7. Maintaining a dual vision of one's partner that combines early idealization with reality perception
