Chapter 1

The Nature and History of Criminal Law

CHAPTER OVERVIEW

Chapter one defines law and how it relates to the norms, mores, morals, and crime within society. The historical and philosophical perspectives of law are covered to establish the origin of law in the United States. The tradition of Common Law, along with how it functions today is discussed, as well as criminal procedure and the different types of crimes. The modern legal system, such as federalism, the separation of powers, and the due-process system are also discussed.

CHAPTER OBJECTIVES

After reading this chapter, the students should be able to:

- Define crime and criminal law.
- Summarize the origins and development of criminal law.
- Describe the role of common law in modern criminal law and explain the differences between procedural and substantive criminal law.
- Describe the various ways in which crimes can be classified and list the four traditional types of crimes.
- Identify the purposes served by criminal law.
- Identify the various sources of criminal law, including the principle of stare decisis.
- Describe the structure of the U.S. legal system, including jurisdiction.
- Describe the adversarial and accusatorial qualities of the U.S. system of criminal justice.
- Expound upon the “rule of law” and explain why the due process is an integral part of the rule of law.

LECTURE OUTLINE

I. Introduction

The introduction of this chapter provides a true-life story of a man who complained about the quality of drugs he had purchased.

II. What Is Criminal Law?

Law is defined according to Black’s Law Dictionary as “that which is laid down, ordained, or established a body of rules of action or conduct prescribed by controlling authority and having binding legal force.”

Not all rules are laws, and even fewer are considered crimes. Society, in general, adheres to norms, mores, and morals to police their behaviors. Criminal law can be understood as a body of rules and regulations that define and specify the punishments for offenses of a public nature or for wrongs committed against the state or society.

III. Historical and Philosophical Perspectives—Laws in the United States have been shaped by a number of historical developments and philosophical perspectives. Criminal law, in particular, has been greatly influenced by natural law theories.

A. Natural and positive law. Natural law can be defined as the rules of conduct inherent in human nature and in the natural order, which are thought to be knowable through intuition, inspiration, and the exercise of reason without the need to refer to man-made laws.

With natural law, the belief is that an intuitive and rational basis for many of our criminal laws can be found in immutable moral principles or some identifiable aspects of the natural order. This theory holds that individuals naturally possess certain freedoms that may not be encroached upon by other individuals or governments.

B. Positive law is a contrasting construct, which simply states that the law is enforced by the government.

IV. History of Western law. Ancient laws—Code of Ur-Nammu from Mesopotamia is similar to contemporary U.S. law, it distinguished between compensation and punishment—or in contemporary terms civil law and common law.

Code of Hammurabi codified offenses, their punishment, and emphasized retribution.

Civil and common law traditions—Briefly discuss the Justinian Code, Roman law codified under the emperor that influenced our common law tradition when Rome conquered England in the first century.

V. Civil and Common Law Traditions

Courts began to develop common law, case by case that would establish a precedent. This embodied the idea that cases with similar facts should have the same law applied. In England, it began as a set of norms and rules of a community and transformed into a set of laws for a nation.

A. Common law today. All states today, with the exception of Louisiana, remain common law states. The responsibility of interpreting and applying the law belongs to judges, who, through their interpretation of both statutes and precedent, continue to develop the existing body of common law.

- Teaching tip: This would be a good place to explain common law and how it applies to decisions today. Most cases come from common law and precedent. Case precedent is still used in decision making for most cases in our legal system.

B. Civil law distinguished. Explain how criminal law governs the relationship between man and society, while civil law governs the relationships among men. These laws are not prosecuted by the government or the subject of punishment. Instead, the aggrieved person may be entitled to monetary damages or specific performance.

There are three forms of torts—negligence, intentional behavior, and strict liability.

The primary intention of civil actions is to provide compensation for losses known as damages.

In instances of extremely negligent or intentional behavior, civil suit plaintiffs may be awarded punitive damages.

- C. Criminal procedure distinguished. How criminal case is processed through the legal system, including any challenges to the manner in which evidence may have been seized or a search conducted, is the subject of criminal procedure.

VI. Types of Crimes

- A. Types of crimes may include felonies, misdemeanors, and infractions, violations, or petty offenses (depending upon how the legislature has named those offenses). Classification is generally by the punishment that may be imposed; felonies, more than one-year imprisonment. Misdemeanors, less than one year in a jail. Infractions, violations, or petty offenses, usually no incarceration and a fine only.
- Teaching tip: Mention white-collar crimes and how, while they are criminal, they are not judged or punished in the same manner as “criminal” crimes.
- B. Crimes are either mala in se, or those that are inherently wrong, or mala prohibita, or those offenses that are wrong because they are prohibited by law.

VII. The Purposes of Criminal Law

Discuss the purposes of society regulating the conduct of its citizens through the democratic process. Those designated representatives are charged with creating, enforcing, and interpreting those laws. The purpose and goal is toward an orderly society through a set of rules applicable to everyone.

Sources of Criminal Law

- A. Constitutions. The U.S. Constitution and state constitutions provide the authority for the government to create laws through the legislative process. Explain the difference between federal laws and state laws, which are created through the inherent police authority the states have.
- B. Statutes, ordinances, and regulations. Explain how a legislative body may determine what to call its set of criminal laws, how they are organized, and the elements that make up a particular law.
- C. The common law. Common law still has an influence in today’s legal system. For instance, many state legislatures have a specific provision that recognizes the enforceability of the common law through its courts, provided that law is not inconsistent with the Constitution or laws of that state. Also, the common law provides a persuasive authority in the interpretation of the criminal law.
- D. Model Penal Code
- A guide for legislative bodies, created by the American Law Institute. Not binding unless adopted and passed by the government through the legislative process.

VIII. The Modern U.S. Legal System

- A. Federalism. Discuss the relationship between federal and state court systems, and the dual sovereign doctrine.

B. Separation of powers. Legislative branch, its function in making law, and the ability to override an executive veto.

Executive branch, its function in signing the law into effect and enforcing the law.

Judicial branch interprets the law and determines whether the law comports with Constitutional standards. (Discuss a hypothetical law that is passed and signed into effect that is contrary to the Constitution.)

IX. The Adversarial, Accusatorial Due-Process System

Explain the criminal process of the government, bringing charges, in an adversarial position to the accused, representing the interests of the people. Remind students of due process requirements (notice, opportunity to be heard, see, hear and cross examine witnesses).

X. The Rule of Law

A. This means in theory that no man is above the law and applied uniformly to everyone.

B. The World Justice Project identified the following elements as essential to rule of law: the accountability of government officials; whether laws are enacted and implemented in a fair and efficient manner; the degree of clarity of laws; the degree to which laws protect fundamental rights; and whether access to justice is administered by fair and independent judicial officers.

LIST OF CHANGES/TRANSITION GUIDE

In Chapter 1, stories and data were updated, recent federalism developments were added, and the discussion of common law was edited to be clearer. Throughout the text, Capstone Cases were moved closer to their textual references.

ADDITIONAL ASSIGNMENTS AND CLASS ACTIVITIES

Sample Essay Questions

1. The law consists of enforceable rules that govern relationships. Explain the difference between civil law and criminal law as to how the rules are applied, the similarities and differences, and the consequences that may result when a rule is broken.
2. List the different sources of law in our modern-day legal system. What are they? How are they enacted? What do they control or regulate?

Research Projects

1. Compare and contrast the different legal systems throughout the world.
2. Why does the Constitution limit the U.S. government's authority to pass criminal laws?

Student Activities

1. After reading the case of Payne v. Tennessee, have the students split into three groups: The first group will advocate the holding of the case to allow victim impact evidence. The second group will counter that the allowance of such evidence has serious issues regarding inflammatory evidence influencing the decision of the jury. The third group, the observation group, will not take a position but question the legal reasoning of either group.
2. Have students briefly research and report on the various legal systems in place throughout the world. Have them identify the relevant characteristics of those systems and compare those to our system of American jurisprudence.

SUGGESTED ANSWERS TO END-OF-CHAPTER ASSIGNMENTS

1. Law is defined as “that which is laid down.” The common components of law include norms, mores, and morals of that particular society in which the law is written.
2. The history of law in Western society includes the philosophies of natural and positivist law. The influence of ancient law, such as the Code of Hammurabi has also had an impact on the way both law is written and interpreted today.
3. Common law today relies on the concept of stare decisis, or precedent, which allows judges to rely on both statute and former case law to determine the cases before them.
4. Criminal procedure relies on the concept of due process, or the protection of an individual’s liberties. Substantive law is the elements, statutes, and codes that describe particular crimes.
5. Many will claim that the overall purpose of criminal law today is to maintain public order and ensure the safety of society. Criminal law can serve to restrain those whom society considers dangerous and can deter potential offenders.
6. The main source of criminal law is the Constitution, particularly the Bill of Rights. Statutes, ordinances, and regulations also serve as a source of criminal law.
7. The modern U.S. legal system is based on the concept of federalism, which divides the power of the federal government and the states. The federal government is divided up into three branches (executive, legislative, and judicial) as a way to separate the powers. Both the state and the federal governments have different and distinct jurisdictions.
8. The adversarial system is one that pits the prosecution and the defense against one another to debate the truth. The inquisitorial system relies of the power of the judge to interpret the code of law.
9. The rule of law is the maxim that an orderly society must be governed by an orderly society. Due process is important because it ensures that an individual’s rights are kept intact during the threat of prosecution.

1.6 Critical Thinking Questions

- 1) What is the rule of law? Who does it apply to?

Answer: This means in theory that no man is above the law and all laws are applied uniformly to everyone. The World Justice Project identified the following elements as essential to the rule of law: the accountability of government officials; whether laws are enacted and implemented in a fair and efficient manner; the degree of clarity of laws; the degree to which laws protect fundamental rights; and whether access to justice is administered by fair and independent judicial officers.

- 2) Laws in the United States have been shaped by a number of historical developments and philosophical perspectives. Explain how criminal law, in particular, has been greatly influenced by natural law and positive law theories.

Answer: Natural law can be defined as the rules of conduct inherent in human nature and in the natural order. These are thought to be discoverable through intuition, inspiration, and the exercise of reason without the need to refer to man-made laws.

With natural law, the belief is that an intuitive and rational basis for many of our criminal laws can be found in immutable moral principles or some identifiable aspects of the natural order. Man-made laws should conform to principles inherent in natural law. This theory holds that individuals naturally possess certain freedoms that may not be encroached upon by other individuals or governments. Positive law is a contrasting construct, which simply states that the law is legitimately created and enforced by the government.
