Purpose and Perspective of the Chapter

The purpose of this chapter is to explore several different aspects of the corporate social responsibility, or CSR, topic and provide some insights into what CSR means and how businesses are carrying it out. An entire chapter is devoted to CSR concepts because it is a core idea that underlies most of the material in the textbook. This chapter also focuses on the concept of corporate citizenship.

Cengage Supplements

The following product-level supplements provide additional information that may help you in preparing your course. They are available in the Instructor Resource Center.

- Case Notes

Chapter Objectives

The following objectives are addressed in this chapter:

- 02.01 Describe some early views of corporate social responsibility (CSR). Explain how CSR evolved and encompasses economic, legal, ethical, and philanthropic components. Explain the Pyramid of CSR. How is it a unified whole, dynamic, and sustainable? How does ethics permeate the pyramid? Will the pyramid vary globally?
- 02.02 Articulate the traditional arguments both against and for CSR. Explain how the business case for CSR has strengthened the concept's acceptance.
- 02.03 Describe how the concept of corporate social responsiveness differs from CSR.
- 02.04 Explain how corporate social performance (CSP) became more popular. Describe how it is different than CSR. What does corporate social impact address?
- 02.05 Describe how corporate citizenship is a valuable way of thinking about CSR. Explain its broad and narrow views.
- 02.06 Summarize the three perspectives on the relationship between corporate social performance (CSP) and corporate financial performance (CFP).
- 02.07 Define CSR Greenwashing and how it may lead to misleading reputational profiles of companies.
- 02.08 Describe and characterize the socially responsible investing movement. Differentiate between negative and positive screens that are used in investment decisions.

Key Terms

Business Case for CSR: the reasons why businesspeople believe that CSR brings distinct benefits or advantages to their organizations as well as to the business community

Business for Social Responsibility (BSR): formed to fill an urgent need for a national business alliance that fosters socially responsible corporate policies.

Conscious capitalism: a broader term for the concept of corporate social responsibility

Corporate citizenship: the concept of corporate social responsibility

Corporate social impact: addresses what impact or effect is being realized or felt by the recipients of the firm's performance initiatives

Corporate social performance (CSP): suggests that what really matters is what companies are able to achieve—the results or outcomes of their acceptance of CSR

Corporate social responsibility (CSR): seriously considering the impact of the company's actions on society

Corporate social responsiveness: an action-oriented variant of CSR

Creating shared value (CSV): argues that business and society could be brought back together again if businesses redefined their basic purpose as creating shared value

CSR exemplar firms: socially responsible firms have become models for other firms

CSR Greenwashing: intentionally seeking to convey the image of a socially responsible firm when the evidence of their practices does not support this conclusion

Economic responsibilities: the objectives to produce goods and services that society needs and wants and to sell them at fair prices

Environmental, social, and governance (ESG) investing: a comprehensive investing approach complete with social and environmental screens, shareholder activism, and community investment

Ethical responsibilities: encompassing those decision and practice arenas in which society expects certain levels of moral or principled performance but for which it has not yet been articulated or codified into law

Explicit CSR: voluntary, self-interest-driven policies, programs, and strategies as is typical in U.S.-based understandings of CSR

Global corporate citizenship: international extensions of serious considerations of the impact of the company's actions on society

Impact investing: considers environmental, social, and corporate governance (ESG) criteria aimed at generating long-term competitive financial returns and positive societal impact

Implicit CSR: embraces the entirety of a country's formal and informal institutions that assign corporations an agreed-on share of responsibility for society's concerns

Legal responsibilities: reflect society's view of "codified ethics" in the sense that they articulate basic notions of fair practices that are established by lawmakers

Mainstream adopters (of CSR): A third group of CSR exemplar firms that includes all other conventional businesses that have adopted, practiced, and achieved some degree of distinction or recognition for socially responsible policies and practices

Philanthropic responsibilities: these are perceived and understood as responsibilities because they reflect current expectations of business by the public

Philanthropy: organized charitable giving

Purpose-driven business: companies that operate with all important stakeholders in mind, not just shareholders

Pyramid of Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR): a useful way of graphically depicting the four-part definition of CSR with four layers or levels

Social enterprises: supposes that businesses do have a higher purpose than profits only

Social entrepreneurship: entrepreneurship that began their CSR initiatives at their founding and strategically carried it forward

Social intrapreneurship: companies that did not have a specific social agenda as part of their initial formation but later developed from within a highly visible social agenda or program

Socially responsible, sustainable, or ethical investing: sometimes called impact investing

Stages of corporate citizenship: the challenges of credibility, capacity, coherence, and commitment that firms move through as they come to grips with developing more integrated citizenship agendas

Stakeholder-bottom line: the view that the firm has “multiple bottom lines” that benefit from CSP

Sustainability: business’s ability to survive and thrive over the long term

Sustainable development: a pattern of resource use that aims to meet current human needs while preserving the environment so that these needs can be met not only in the present but also for future generations

Discussion Questions

You can assign these questions several ways: in a discussion forum in your LMS; as whole-class discussions in person; or as a partner or group activity in class.

1. Discussion: CSR Meaning (pages 20-21, 2.1, PPT Slide 9) Duration 15 minutes.
 - a. Question: Generally speaking, what does CSR mean? What are some of the earlier definitions of CSR? Why were they sometimes ambiguous?
 - I. Answer: CSR meaning refers to the impact a company has on a society. Further definitions provided more detail to the obligations of decision makers to take actions that protect and improve the welfare of society along with their own interests. Therefore, CSR and a company's actions provided more context to what they were doing. However, other definitions provided more context for the shareholders possibly wondering why capital was being spent but not clearly seeing the results to the bottom line. Therefore, another definition supposes that the corporation has not only economic and legal obligation, but also certain responsibilities to society that extent beyond these obligations. Finally reaching the definition of CSR to encompass the economic, legal, ethical, and discretionary (philanthropic) expectations that society has of organizations at a given point in time.

2. Discussion: The Pyramid of Corporate Social Responsibility (page 24, 2.1, PPT Slide 13) Duration 15 minutes.
 - a. Question: Explain the Pyramid of Corporate Social Responsibility. Define each category and provide several examples of each “layer” of the pyramid. Identify and discuss some of the tensions among and between the layers or components. In what sense do the different layers of the pyramid “overlap” with each other?
 - I. Answer: The Pyramid of Corporate Social Responsibility is a graphic representation of Carroll’s four-part definition of CSR. According to Carroll, society has four expectations of a corporation—economic, legal, ethical, and philanthropic. The pyramid shows the economic responsibility at the bottom, because it is the foundation upon which all others rest. Society’s first expectation of a corporation is that it will be profitable. This is consistent with classical economic thought, which provides that management must maximize the profits of its owners. Companies that repeatedly do not show a profit will see falling stock prices and eventual bankruptcy and may find it more difficult (if not impossible) to meet their legal, ethical, and philanthropic responsibilities. Several companies in both the automotive and airline industries struggled to meet their economic responsibilities and landed in bankruptcy as a result. The second level is legal, because society requires corporations to follow the law, just as they are required to make a profit. Companies can receive stiff penalties for breaking the law. In the last decade, hundreds of publicly traded companies were investigated by federal regulatory agencies for abusive practices related to stock option grants and were subjected to penalties due to faulty accounting and public disclosures. The third level is the ethical responsibility—society expects ethical behavior of companies. The corporate scandals that shaped the beginning of this century pointed out that society expects honest and fair reporting of financial operations by executives. If this expectation is violated, the executives can face criminal charges, as Martha Stewart and several Enron officials discovered. More recently, executives in financial services firms have found themselves subject to public scrutiny for arguably unethical practices related to aggressive lending practices. On the other hand, companies may find themselves recognized for their ethical activities. Starbucks and the Timberland Company are often recognized for their ethical practices. At the top is the philanthropic responsibility. Society desires this of corporations, but the company has discretion in whether it performs at this level or not. Walmart and AT&T are two firms that are widely praised for their philanthropic endeavors, especially their charitable cash contributions. While the economic responsibility is the base of the pyramid, a CSR or stakeholder perspective would focus on the pyramid as a unified whole. Companies are expected to fulfill their economic, legal, ethical and philanthropic responsibilities simultaneously, meaning that companies need to concurrently (1) make a profit, (2) obey the law, (3) be ethical, and (4) be a good corporate citizen. While the simultaneous fulfillment of all four responsibilities can be challenging, the best moral managers will use moral imagination to develop solutions to corporate dilemmas that meet all four responsibilities at the same time.

3. Discussion: Pyramid of CSR (pages 24–25, 2.1, PPT Slide 15)
 - a. Question: In what sense is the Pyramid of CSR a unified whole, dynamic, and sustainable? How is it stakeholder inclusive?
 - I. Answer: The unified whole pyramid from a stakeholder perspective would focus on how the firm should engage in decisions, actions, policies, and practices that simultaneously fulfill its four components' parts (Economic, Legal, Ethical, and Philanthropic). From the stakeholder perspective on the dynamic and sustainable models, each of the four CSRs would address different stakeholder perspectives and various priorities, which may change overtime. For instance, economic responsibilities impact owners, shareholders, and employees because if the business is not financially sustainable, owners, shareholders, and employees are directly impacted, who are also stakeholders.
4. Discussion: CSR Exemplar Firm (page 26, 2.1, PPT Slide 17)
 - a. Question: Explain what makes a CSR exemplar firm. Distinguish among social entrepreneurship, social intrapreneurship, and mainstream adopters.
 - I. Answer: Exemplar firms are socially responsible firms that have become models for other firms. Social entrepreneurship firms are those firms that began their CSR initiatives at their founding and strategically carried it forward. Social intrapreneurship firms are companies that did not have a specific social agenda as part of their initial formation but later developed from within a highly visible social agenda or program. Mainstream adopters would include all other conventional businesses that have adopted, practiced, and achieved some degree of distinction or recognition for socially responsible policies and practices.
5. Discussion: Arguments Against CSR (page 28, 2.2, PPT Slide 23) Duration 15 minutes.
 - a. Question: What is the one greatest strength of a pluralistic society? What is the one greatest weakness? Do these characteristics work for or against business?

- I. Answer: There are few, if any, legitimate arguments against CSR. The closest one could come to making a logical argument is that corporations should not be required to “fill the gaps” in social policy. That is, corporations should not be held responsible for providing funds and services for things that governments should be doing (e.g., school funding or social safety nets). The primary argument for CSR is that corporations are recognized as “persons” and receive as many, if not more, rights and privileges than do actual persons. If corporations are to benefit from such “citizenship,” they should be expected to contribute to society, just like actual persons are. The Wall Street Journal recently reexamined this debate in an August 2010 story entitled “The Case Against Corporate Social Responsibility.” In this article, Dr. Aneel Karnani, a professor of strategy at the University of Michigan's Stephen M. Ross School of Business, argues: “In cases where private profits and public interests are aligned, the idea of corporate social responsibility is irrelevant: Companies that simply do everything they can to boost profits will end up increasing social welfare. In circumstances in which profits and social welfare are in direct opposition, an appeal to corporate social responsibility will almost always be ineffective, because executives are unlikely to act voluntarily in the public interest and against shareholder interests.” This article certainly has prompted many in the pro-CSR camp to respond. In a BusinessEthics.com article entitled “Opinion: The Case Against the Case Against CSR,” Tim Mohin, the director of corporate responsibility at AMD, contends that CSR is a win-win situation for companies and that smart companies take a long view and build brand value and investment with CSR.
6. Discussion: Responsibility, Responsiveness, and Citizenship (page 31, 2.3 and 2.5, PPT Slide 31) Duration 15 minutes.
 - a. Question: In small groups, differentiate between corporate social responsibility and corporate social responsiveness. Give an example of each. How does corporate social performance relate to these terms? Where do corporate citizenship and sustainability fit in?
 - I. Answer: Carroll's four-part definition of corporate social responsibility is “The social responsibility of business encompasses the economic, legal, ethical, and discretionary (philanthropic) expectations that society has of organizations at a given point in time.” The concept of corporate social responsibility has been criticized because its focus is on accountability or obligation to meet certain minimum duties. Corporate social responsiveness is a more proactive and action-oriented concept, wherein business firms anticipate social expectations and meet them before they are imposed as a new responsibility on the company. A corporation that obeys existing laws is displaying corporate social responsibility. An example of corporate social responsiveness would be a firm providing child care benefits to its working parents, thus responding to the reality of issues faced by working families. Corporate social performance focuses on what firms are actually able to accomplish; specifically, the outcomes or results of their acceptance of corporate social responsibility and implementation of corporate social responsiveness. Corporate social performance includes a recognition of the four corporate responsibilities identified by Carroll and measures the success of the firm's responsiveness to these responsibilities.

7. Discussion: CSR Frameworks (pages 37–8, 2.8, PPT Slide 43)

- a. Compare and contrast the socially oriented concepts: CSR, corporate citizenship, sustainability, creating shared value, and conscious capitalism. Do these represent different forms of the business and society relationship, or do they represent how and why companies respond in a socially conscious manner?
 - I. Answer: Corporate social responsibility (CSR) can be boiled down to a company's actions and how they affect society. This is a more broad concept, whereas the others are a bit more specific. Corporate citizenship is the concept that a company should give back to a community simply because it is a member of that community. This is a philanthropic expectation. Sustainability has three different parts for a company: 1) Economic sustainability, which is looking out for its profits; 2) social sustainability, which focuses on the quality of people's lives and equality between people, communities, and nations; 3) environmental sustainability concerns protecting the environment, focusing on the planet. The people and planet aspects make sustainability more of an ethical expectation. Creating shared value speaks to the economic sustainability focus—the profits. Though shared value is about economic success for the company, the company also creates opportunity for economic success in other areas of the community, in a sense sharing the wealth. Conscious capitalism is another broad concept. It focuses on the interdependence of business, and working toward higher purpose, stakeholder orientation, conscious leadership, and conscious culture. If everything, including people, environment, and profit, is intertwined, to succeed a company must be conscious of its effect on each part. These concepts outline how and why companies respond in a socially conscious manner. As many of the concepts mention, social consciousness is linked to profits. Without those profits, companies no longer exist.

8. Discussion: Impact Investing (pages 38–39, 2.9, PPT Slide 47) Duration 15 minutes.
 - a. Question: Does socially responsible, sustainable, or ethical investing seem to you to be a legitimate way in which the average citizen might demonstrate her or his concern for CSR? Why is it also called impact investing? Discuss.
 - I. Answer: On the one hand, socially responsible investing seems to send the message that the investor is concerned about the firm's CSP. However, the fact that returns on ethical investing approximate market returns seems to downplay this view. If the investor is truly concerned with the firm's CSP, he or she should be willing to accept a lower rate of return on the investment. In addition, the vast majority of investments never reach the firm. Unless the firm is offering a new issue of stock, the proceeds of the sale go to the previous owner of the securities, not to the firm. It is called impact investing because it considers environmental, social, and corporate governance criteria aimed at generating long-term competitive financial returns and positive societal impact.

Additional Activities and Assignments

1. Cases: In this chapter, instructors may utilize a combination of cases:
 - 1- Wal-Mart - The Main Street Merchant of Doom
 - 2- Walmart's Labor Practices
 - 3- Chipotle's Struggle with Food Safety: Back on Top Again?
 - 4- The Theranos Story and Fake Blood Testing: Culture, Crime, and Hubris
 - 7- Volkswagen's Diesel Deception and Its Aftermath
 - 12- Family Business
 - 19- An Ethical Dilemma for Chiquita in Colombia
 - 23- McDonald's: The Coffee Spill Heard 'Round the World
 - 24- Boeing's Two Flight Crashes
 - 25- Should States Woo Big Business with Tax Incentives? Amazon Thinks So!
 - 26- Everlane: Ethical Chic and Radical Transparency in Global Supply Chains
 - 27- Slow and Sustainable Fashion
 - 29- "Dead Peasant" Life Insurance Policies
 - 31- Two Vets, Two Dogs, and a Deadlock
 - 33- To Take or Not to Take

2. Group Activity:

Have students establish the parameters for a social screen for investments. Specifically, ask students to identify the criteria for socially responsible investments. Once the class establishes the "social screen" as a group, divide the students into groups of four to five students.

Each group will be given a theoretical account with $500 to invest in firms that meet the criteria established by the entire class. Each group should be given a week to research firms for potential investment. Each group should provide a summary sheet to the instructor allocating the $500 among socially responsible investments that meet the class criteria. Each group should track the return on their investments through the end of the semester and report the value of their portfolio at that time. Opportunity should be given to discuss why certain investments were made.

Instructors may want to provide some type of reward for the group with the greatest return on investment. Groups that select companies that do not meet the class social screen should be disqualified.

3. Individual Assignment:

Have students read the June 14, 2012, Wall Street Journal article entitled "The Case Against Corporate Social Responsibility," by Dr. Aneel Karnani (see <http://online.wsj.com/article/SB10001424052748703338004575230112664504890.html>).

Ask students to independently research academic and business responses to this article. Students should summarize the arguments for and against corporate social responsibility based upon their review of Dr. Karnani's article and their own independent research. Students then should state which argument they find most persuasive and why.

Generic Rubrics

Providing students with rubrics helps them understand expectations and components of assignments. Rubrics help students become more aware of their learning process and progress, and they improve students' work through timely and detailed feedback. Customize these rubrics as you wish. The writing rubric indicates 40 points and the discussion rubric indicates 30 points.

Standard Writing Rubric

Criteria	Meets Requirements	Needs Improvement	Incomplete
Content	The assignment clearly and comprehensively addresses all questions in the assignment. 15 points	The assignment partially addresses some or all questions in the assignment. 8 points	The assignment does not address the questions in the assignment. 0 points
Organization and Clarity	The assignment presents ideas in a clear manner and with strong organizational structure. The assignment includes an appropriate introduction, content, and conclusion. Coverage of facts, arguments, and conclusions are logically related and consistent. 10 points	The assignment presents ideas in a mostly clear manner and with a mostly strong organizational structure. The assignment includes an appropriate introduction, content, and conclusion. Coverage of facts, arguments, and conclusions are mostly logically related and consistent. 7 points	The assignment does not present ideas in a clear manner and with strong organizational structure. The assignment includes an introduction, content, and conclusion, but coverage of facts, arguments, and conclusions are not logically related and consistent. 0 points
Research	The assignment is based upon appropriate and adequate academic literature, including peer-reviewed journals and other scholarly work. 5 points	The assignment is based upon adequate academic literature but does not include peer-reviewed journals and other scholarly work. 3 points	The assignment is not based upon appropriate and adequate academic literature and does not include peer-reviewed journals and other scholarly work. 0 points
Research	The assignment follows the required citation guidelines. 5 points	The assignment follows some of the required citation guidelines. 3 points	The assignment does not follow the required citation guidelines. 0 points
Grammar and Spelling	The assignment has two or fewer grammatical and spelling errors. 5 points	The assignment has three to five grammatical and spelling errors. 3 points	The assignment is incomplete or unintelligible. 0 points

61. Explain why Business for Social Responsibility (BSR) was formed.

ANSWER: BSR was formed to fill an urgent need for a national business alliance that fosters socially responsible corporate policies. Identification of this need was aided by the close scrutiny that business has been receiving for the past three decades (as outlined in Chapter 1).

62. In Carroll's four-part definition of corporate social responsibility, he includes philanthropic responsibilities, yet he describes these as voluntary or discretionary. Explain this seeming contrast between a responsibility and a voluntary activity.

ANSWER: Carroll says that philanthropy is a responsibility because it is expected of business by society. However, it is not required, as are the economic and legal responsibilities. Business can forego philanthropic activities without suffering sanctions from society, and it has discretion in what causes it supports and how it contributes to those causes.

63. One of the arguments that opponents of corporate social responsibility use is that business already has enough power, so society should not grant it more power by relying on it to alleviate social problems. Evaluate this argument.

ANSWER: In many ways, the arguments for corporate social responsibility can be summarized by the old saying, "to whom much is given, much is expected." Business already has a high degree of power in our society, and so, according to this saying, it should be expected to help solve social problems. Because business already has this power, it does not seem that society would be losing anything by requiring business to use it to solve social problems, rather than focus solely on gaining further financial rewards for itself.

64. One of the arguments against corporate social responsibility is that by requiring more of U.S. corporations, they may be put at a disadvantage relative to foreign competitors. Evaluate this argument.

ANSWER: This argument is fallacious on its face. Corporate social responsibility is rapidly becoming a global concern, and many other countries require more from their corporations than the U.S. requires.

65. In the 1890s, the Robber Barons began to use their personal wealth and the wealth accumulated by their corporations to enhance the social good. Their philanthropic activities were encouraged, in part, because public opinion was demanding that the government do something to limit their power. Is this type of activity still occurring in the United States? Why or why not?

ANSWER: Philanthropic activity to help ward off government intervention is still a central reason business uses to justify the corporate social responsibility concept. In fact, this is a central argument in support of CSR today.

66. Summarize the argument used to explain why the concept of corporate social responsiveness is an improvement over corporate social responsibility.

ANSWER: Corporate social responsibility's emphasis on obligations and accountability implied that business should do only the minimum that would satisfy the duties imposed on it by society. Corporate social responsiveness, on the other hand, emphasizes a proactive, dynamic, and action orientation. In this paradigm, business should actively seek to meet social needs before they become a duty imposed by society. Using this approach both encourages social performance by business and allows it more latitude in what actions it will take.

67. Explain the concept of "multiple bottom lines." Why do advocates of this approach prefer it over the traditional method of measuring the firm's financial performance?

ANSWER: Advocates of the multiple bottom-line approach argue that there is more to a firm's overall performance than simply its financial results of operations. Using the definitions of dual-entry bookkeeping, benefits provided to any constituent other than owners (e.g., compensation to workers, payments to suppliers, costs to reduce pollution) are regarded as "evils" to be kept at a minimum. The multiple bottom-line approach recognizes that a firm has many stakeholders, and that not all stakeholders share common objectives. By reporting on several aspects of the firm's performance, including financial, proponents say that enhanced information is provided and the firm can better assess its impact on society.

68. What are the most common greenwashing sins?

ANSWER: The most common greenwashing sins range from using weak data to support marketing claims to more deliberate deceptions such as inventing bogus certifications. In addition, some companies may be participating in a more generalized version of the environmental subterfuge that we might call CSR Greenwashing: intentionally seeking to convey the image of a socially responsible firm when the evidence of their practices does not support this conclusion.

69. Why has Political CSR emerged, especially in European countries?

ANSWER: In Europe, the government historically has assumed a larger role in providing societal benefits. There, PCSR includes those business activities that elevate corporations to political agents. This means they engage in public deliberations, collective decisions, and the provision of public goods or the restriction of public ills when public authorities are unable or unwilling to fulfill this role.

70. Describe socially responsible investing.

ANSWER: The basic concept underlying socially responsible investing is that some investors seek to place their money in companies that behave in socially responsible ways. Looking at it from the opposite perspective, these investors do not want to invest in firms that act in socially irresponsible ways, such as damaging the environment or neglecting workers' rights. A whole methodology has grown to support socially responsible investing, including social and environmental screens, shareholder activism, and community investment. More than $2 trillion is invested in this manner in the United States, and returns are competitive with other investment vehicles.

Utilize the knowledge you have gained to respond to the following essay questions. Your answers should state your position and use logical arguments and content from this and other chapters in the textbook to support it.

71. The primary argument for corporate social responsibility states that for business to have a healthy climate in which to operate in the future, it must take current action to assure its long-term viability. Is this long-range self-interest argument valid? Does it encompass all that society wants from business?

ANSWER: Students should recognize that the argument is certainly valid. Survival is a central motive for all organisms/organizations. Therefore, taking action to improve one's chances for survival is a valid and appropriate response. This is true whether one is talking about eating the right foods and exercising for humans, or socially responsible activities for corporations. The debate should take place over the question of whether it encompasses all that society wants from business. Stated in another way, is survival the only motive we expect from each other and from our business institutions? Some students will be convinced that self-interest is all that we can realistically expect from business, while others will argue that business is part of a larger society, and thus should be expected to contribute to society in ways that benefit others, for reasons beyond survival. This debate should mirror the continuing discussion between individualistic political philosophers and communitarians.

72. Explain the concept of the stakeholder bottom line.

ANSWER: The concept of the stakeholder bottom line maintains that the impacts or benefits of social performance cannot be fully measured or appreciated by considering only the impact on the firm's financial bottom line. The reasoning is that CSP cannot be fully comprehended unless its impacts on stakeholders, such as consumers, employees, the community, and other stakeholder groups, are recognized and measured. Research may never conclusively demonstrate a simple relationship between CSP and financial performance. But a stakeholder perspective may be more straightforward to assess the impact of CSP on multiple stakeholders.

73. Distinguish between the concepts of corporate social responsibility, corporate social responsiveness, corporate social performance, and corporate citizenship. How are these ideas different from each other? How are they similar?

ANSWER: Students should recognize that responsibility focuses on accountability and obligations imposed on business by society. This is the most passive of the four concepts, which is its primary shortcoming. Responsiveness implies proaction and activity by business in anticipating social needs before they become duties imposed by society. This concept is an improvement over responsibility, but it still does not incorporate the results of its activities. This shortcoming is addressed by performance, with its focus on outcomes. Corporate citizenship encompasses all three of the other concepts, but does not really add much new to the discussion.
