Essay (8)

Q43. [Essay] · Cognitive Domain: Analysis

Blau and Scott define an organization by using four categories, each representing people who may benefit from the organization. Identify each of these four categories of organizational beneficiaries and explain how their definition fits with criminal justice.

Suggested answer: Sample response: 1) owners and managers (management), 2) rank and file organizational members (membership); 3) people outside of the organization who have regular contact with it (the client), and the public at large or members of society (the commonwealth). Their definition fits well with criminal justice since the victim and the commonwealth (public) may benefit when an offender is arrested and placed in jail.

Q44. [Essay] · Cognitive Domain: Application

The systems model suggests that organizations may have subsystems. Identify an example of a subsystem that operates within the larger system of a police department.

Suggested answer: Sample response: Detective units in police departments can be thought of as subsystems. The detectives' unit has its own mission, goals, and values, yet the detectives are working to accomplish the larger policing goals of providing services, identifying crime, and working with and protecting the public.

Q45. [Essay] · Cognitive Domain: Analysis

Three different theoretical approaches are used to identify effective leaders and leadership characteristics. Briefly describe and compare each of these three approaches.

Suggested answer: Sample response: Trait theories imply leaders are born and possess qualities such as integrity and honesty. Behavioral theories suggest leaders are better able to perform the behaviors associated with leadership and get people in the organization to accomplish individual and organizational goals. Situational theories state the most appropriate leadership style depends on the situation and the people. These theories realize that no one behavior may be appropriate in all situations with all people and that traits alone cannot always inspire others.

Q46. [Essay] · Cognitive Domain: Analysis

Managers in criminal justice organizations are sometimes selected in spite of the fact that they are not the best leaders. Identify several reasons why an individual can be promoted to the position of commissioner, warden, chief probation/parole officer, or other criminal justice manager without necessarily being effective leaders.

Suggested answer: Sample response: Managers, who are assumed to be the leaders in criminal justice agencies, are usually promoted from within and may arrive at their positions because of time in service, community election, appointment, or because of socialization skills or heroism.

Q47. [Essay] · Cognitive Domain: Application

Non-profit organizations, including criminal justice agencies, focus on clients. Think about a prosecutor's office/district attorney's office. Identify four different clients of this office.

Suggested answer: Sample response: The clients of a prosecutor's office/district attorney's office can include an offender, victim, witnesses, police department, and the community at large.

Q48. [Essay] · Cognitive Domain: Analysis

The structure of an organization is related to how much autonomy, or power to self-govern, workers have within that organization. Describe several of the characteristics of formal/centralized organizations. How do these characteristics affect the amount of autonomy possessed by rank-and-file employees in these organizations? Describe several of the characteristics of informal/decentralized organizations. How do these characteristics affect the amount of autonomy possessed by rank-and-file employees in these organizations?

Suggested answer: Sample response: In formal/centralized organizations, managers make most decisions, communication is downward, authority is at the top of the hierarchy, rigid chain of command. This leads to less autonomy as decisions are made and employees are afforded minimal input. In informal/decentralized organizations, delegation of authority occurs, lower-level staff provide input, less rigid chain of command. This leads to more autonomy as lower-level workers are afforded more authority in making decisions.

Q49. [Essay] · Cognitive Domain: Application

Two prisons are managed by two different wardens. One of the wardens is widely regarded throughout the department of corrections for her leadership qualities while the other is known for his management behaviors. What is the difference between these two wardens? What behaviors are associated with leadership distinguish it from management behaviors?

Suggested answer: Sample response: Leaders inspire, promote change, focus on long-term goals, motivate, etc. Managers solve problems, monitor how the job is getting done, tell subordinates what to do and how to do it, and maintain the status quo.

Q50. [Essay] · Cognitive Domain: Analysis

Security agencies may operate for profit or not-for-profit. Aside from a focus on monetary earnings what are two differences between for-profit and not-for-profit agencies? What are two similarities shared by for-profit and non-profit agencies?

Suggested answer: Sample response: The differences between the two types of agencies can include accountability to public (non-profit), fulfilling community needs (non-profit), facing the problem of devolution (non-profit), relying on volunteer staff (non-profit), etc. Similarities include meeting the need for good leaders, setting realistic, achievable goals, seeking and receiving advice from experts outside of the agency, etc.
