V.Comparison of Juvenile and Criminal Justice Systems

CHAPTER SUMMARY

The chapter begins with the origins of the juvenile justice system. Before the establishment of the juvenile justice system, courts and judges treated juveniles as adults and, in many instances, juvenile offenders received the same punishment as adults. Under common law doctrine, the legal system the American colonists brought from England, a juvenile age seven or older could receive the same punishment as an adult.

The juvenile justice system was founded on the belief of parens patriae roughly translated into “state as parent.” The state, acting through a juvenile court judge, can act in the role of parent for the juvenile when parents are deemed incapable or unwilling to control their children.

The chapter also describes the juvenile justice system. Definitions of a juvenile and the types of cases confronting the juvenile justice system are provided in the text. The definitions of terms used exclusively in the juvenile justice system, a brief overview of the major steps in the juvenile justice process, and an explanation of how juveniles are typically processed is also provided. The similarities and differences between the adult and juvenile justice systems are also discussed.

Juvenile delinquency is any behavior that is prohibited by the juvenile law of a state. Each state’s legislature defines delinquency in that particular state. However, delinquency generally consists of two categories. The first category of delinquency is any act committed by a juvenile that would be defined as a crime if committed by an adult. The second category is called a status offense. A status offense is an act of delinquency committed by a juvenile that would not be considered a crime if committed by an adult. Running away from home, skipping school, and violating curfew are all status offenses.

Just as each state has defined delinquency, each state has defined the term juvenile. If an individual is within a certain age range, they are classified as a juvenile and subject to juvenile court jurisdiction. Each state’s legislature determines the minimum and maximum age at which a person is considered a juvenile. Most states use 17 as the maximum age for juvenile court jurisdiction but some states use 16. Not every state has a specified minimum age of juvenile court jurisdiction. Some states do not set a minimum age, but those that do usually set the age between ages 6 and 12.

The language of juvenile justice system is different than the language for adult criminal justice system. Juveniles are not criminals; they are delinquents. They are not convicted; they are adjudicated. Parole is aftercare, a jail is a detention center, a sentence is a disposition, and an indictment is a petition. Juveniles are not arrested; they are taken into custody.

The ways juveniles are processed in the juvenile justice system varies among states and even within the same state. A juvenile enters the formal juvenile justice system by being referred to juvenile court. The main sources of referrals to juvenile court are law enforcement agencies and others such as parents, victims, schools, and probation officers.

After a case has been referred to juvenile court, it is sent to intake. Intake is the procedure by which juvenile court staff decide whether to process the case further in court, handle the case informally, or dismiss the case. The juvenile is typically required to pay victim restitution, complete a drug counseling program, perform community service, attend school, or some other related requirement. If the juvenile completes the requirements, then nothing further occurs with the case (that is, the case is dismissed). This process is sometimes called informal probation.

If a prosecutor decides to prosecute, the juvenile may be tried in the juvenile court or waived to adult court. The process is known as waiver to adult court, certification, or transfer, and involves a juvenile court's relinquishing its jurisdiction over the offender and allowing a juvenile to be sent to adult court for prosecution.

If the juvenile is an adjudicated delinquent, then a disposition is required. Probation is the most common disposition. In some cases, the juvenile is placed in a residential placement. The chapter ends with a brief comparison of juvenile and criminal justice systems.

DETAILED NOTES

I. Origins of the Juvenile Justice System

- There has not always been a juvenile justice system in the U.S.
- Originally there was one justice system that processed all offenders without regard to age.
 - Juveniles were housed in prisons with adults.
 - Juveniles aged 7 and older received the same punishment as adults, sometimes the death penalty although infrequent.
- There was not a separate system for juveniles until the late 1800s.
- First juvenile court was in Cook County, Illinois in 1899.
 - Established because it was believed that
 - Juveniles are less mature than adults.
 - Juveniles are incapable of the same level of intent as adults.
 - Juveniles are more easily rehabilitated than adults.
- Eventually, every state developed their own juvenile system with courts and institutions.
 - Today, most major police departments have officers whose sole responsibility is to deal with juvenile delinquency.
 - Many departments have officers regularly assigned to local elementary and secondary schools in their communities.

- Each state has separate places such as detention centers and institutions in order to confine juveniles apart from adults.
- The juvenile justice system was founded on the belief of parens patriae—a legal doctrine in which the state plays the role of a parent.
 - State acts through a juvenile court judge in the role of parent for the juvenile when parents are incapable or unwilling control their children.
 - Juvenile justice system was designed to do whatever is in the best interest of the juvenile.

II. Juvenile Court Jurisdiction

- Jurisdiction—the authority granted by law to hear a case.
 - State law specifies the jurisdiction of the juvenile court.
- Jurisdiction involves two questions.
 - What acts committed by juveniles does the juvenile court have jurisdiction?
 - What age does an individual have to be in order to be under juvenile court jurisdiction?

A. Defining Delinquency

- Juvenile delinquency is any behavior that is prohibited by the juvenile law of a state.
- Each state's legislature defines delinquency in that particular state.
- Delinquency generally consists of two categories.
 - Any act committed by a juvenile that would be defined as a crime if committed by an adult. For example, theft, burglary, assault, and robbery.
 - Status offenses—something not considered a crime if committed by an adult but would be considered an act of delinquency if committed by a juvenile. For example:
 - Running away from home
 - Skipping school (truancy)
 - Violating curfew
 - Incurigibility (not obeying one's parents)
 - Illegal purchase of alcohol
 - Smoking tobacco
 - Underage drinking
- About one-half of all states classify status offenders as delinquent.
- Other states have established categories which separate juvenile delinquents from status offenders. These states classify status offenders as follows:

- CHINS or CINS—children in need of supervision
- PINS—persons in need of supervision
- JINS—juveniles in need of supervision
- MINS—minors in need of supervision
- Reason for the legal separation of status offenders from juvenile delinquents is to remove the stigma of being classified as a juvenile delinquent from status offenders and to demonstrate that juveniles have special problems and needs and are not criminal in nature.
- Juvenile delinquency is any act ranging from truancy to murder.
- Very broad, almost all juveniles have committed an act considered delinquent at one time.

B. Defining a Juvenile

- Only difference between a juvenile and an adult is age.
 - Only difference between a delinquent and a criminal is age.
- Each state's legislature determines their own age at which a child is no longer considered a juvenile.
 - Most common maximum age is 17.
- Most states do not have a minimum age of juvenile court jurisdiction.
- States that do have a minimum age of juvenile court jurisdiction range from 6 to 12 years of age.
 - In these states, people younger than the minimum age of juvenile court jurisdiction are believed to lack the ability to develop intent and to know right from wrong.
 - In these states, people younger than the minimum age of juvenile court jurisdiction cannot be processed in the juvenile justice system regardless of their action.
 - For example, the minimum age of juvenile court jurisdiction in Pennsylvania is 10 years. If a 9-year-old commits murder, they cannot be processed in the juvenile justice system because the court does not have jurisdiction over the case.
- In Texas, a juvenile is anyone between the ages of 10 and 16.
 - In Texas, the minimum age of juvenile court jurisdiction is 10.
 - In Texas, the maximum age of juvenile court jurisdiction is 16.
 - Criminal actions committed by those 17 years and older in Texas are handled in the criminal justice system, not the juvenile justice system.

III. The Language of Juvenile Justice

- One of the goals of the juvenile justice system was the rehabilitation of juvenile offenders.
- The stigma attached to juveniles who were labeled criminals interfered with the rehabilitation process.
 - This made it necessary to separate the two systems of justice, juvenile and adult, as much as possible.
- A different set of terms were developed for the juvenile justice system to distinguish it from the criminal justice system.
 - The following is a list of terms. The first one is the term used in the juvenile justice system. The term after the equal sign is the term used in the criminal justice system.
 - Adjudicated delinquent = Conviction
 - Adjudication hearing = Trial
 - Aftercare = Parole
 - Commitment = Sentence to prison
 - Delinquent = Criminal
 - Delinquent act = Crime
 - Detention = Confinement in jail
 - Detention center = Jail
 - Disposition = Sentence
 - Disposition hearing = Sentencing hearing
 - Institution = Prison
 - Petition = Indictment
 - Taken into custody = Arrest

IV. Overview of the Juvenile Justice System

A. Law Enforcement and Other Referral Sources

- A juvenile enters the formal juvenile justice system by being referred to juvenile court by the following two main sources:
 - Law enforcement agencies.
 - When a law enforcement officer takes a juvenile into custody, the officer frequently decides whether to send the case further into the juvenile justice system or to divert the case out of the system.
 - An officer makes the decision after speaking with the victim, the juvenile, and the parents.
 - Others such as parents, victims, schools, and probation officers.

B. Juvenile Court

- The process in juvenile court has three distinct procedures.

Juvenile court intake

- This is usually the responsibility of the juvenile probation department or the prosecutor's office.
- At this point in the juvenile court process, an important decision is made. The decision usually involves three alternatives:
 - Dismiss the case against the juvenile and release the individual to their parents.
 - These cases are usually less serious offenses or first-time offenders.
 - Often lack enough evidence to support the allegations against the juvenile.
 - Handle the matter informally.
 - Juvenile agrees to complete certain requirements in exchange for having the case handled informally and not processed further into the system.
 - Refer the case further into the juvenile justice system for formal intervention by the court.
 - Intake officer decides whether the juvenile should be placed in detention or released to the community.
 - Juveniles are not detained unless:
 - Juvenile is determined to be a threat to the community.
 - Juvenile will be in danger if returned to the community.
 - Juvenile is a flight risk and may not appear at the adjudication hearing.

Prosecution

- A prosecutor receives case from intake officer and decides whether or not to file a petition stating allegations against the juvenile in juvenile court. Petition asks juvenile court to adjudicate the juvenile as delinquent.
- If the prosecutor does not file a petition, case is dismissed.
- The prosecutor can also waive juvenile to criminal justice system for prosecution.
 - This process is known as waiver to adult court, certification, or transfer, and involves a juvenile court's relinquishing its jurisdiction over the offender and allowing a juvenile to be sent to adult court for prosecution.

Adjudication

- Adjudication hearings are held in juvenile courts to determine if the juvenile committed the delinquent act.
- This is the trial stage of the juvenile justice process.
- A judge usually determines guilt in juvenile court but occasionally there is a jury.

C. Disposition

- Disposition is equivalent to sentencing in the adult justice system.
- The disposition frequently involves probation or residential placement.

Probation or other nonresidential dispositions

- This is the most common disposition in juvenile court.
- Probation allows juvenile to remain in the community as long as they abide by certain conditions of probation.
- Many times, probation orders require a juvenile to attend counseling programs, to perform community service, and to pay victim restitution.
- Probation is for a specified period of time (for example, one year).

Residential placement

- This is where the juvenile is sent to an institution, camp, ranch, or group home.
- This may be for a specified period of time or indeterminate.
- The residential placement facility could be publicly or privately operated.
- Juvenile is usually required to serve a period of aftercare after release.
 - Aftercare—Supervision of a juvenile after release from an institution (same as parole in the criminal justice system).
- There are two circumstances in which a juvenile in a residential placement may be sent to the criminal justice system for confinement.
 - If the offender commits crime in the facility and is old enough to be classified as an adult in the state.
 - If the individual is subject to blended sentencing. Blended sentencing involves the imposition of juvenile and/or correctional sanctions for serious and violent juvenile offenders who have been processed in the juvenile or adult court.

V. Comparison of Juvenile and Criminal Justice Systems

- Regarding operating assumptions, the juvenile justice system and the criminal justice system differ in the following ways:

- Juvenile Justice System
 - Youth behavior is malleable.
 - Rehabilitation is usually a viable goal.
 - Youth are in families and not independent.
- Criminal Justice System
 - Sanction should be proportional to the offense.
 - General deterrence works.
 - Rehabilitation is not a primary goal.
- Regarding operating assumptions, the juvenile justice system and the criminal justice system are similar in the following ways:
 - Community protection is a primary goal.
 - Law violators must be held accountable.
 - Constitutional rights apply.
- Regarding prevention, the juvenile justice system and the criminal justice system differ in the following ways:
 - Juvenile Justice System
 - Many specific delinquency prevention activities are used.
 - Prevention is intended to change individual behavior and is often focused on reducing risk factors and increasing protective factors in the individual, family, and community.
 - Criminal Justice System
 - Prevention activities are generalized and are aimed at deterrence.
- Regarding prevention, the juvenile justice system and the criminal justice system are similar in the following ways:
 - Educational approaches are taken to specific behaviors (e.g., drunk driving and drug use).
- Regarding law enforcement, the juvenile justice system and the criminal justice system differ in the following ways:
 - Juvenile Justice System
 - Specialized “juvenile” units are used.
 - Some additional behaviors are prohibited (truancy, running away, curfew violations).
 - Some limitations are placed on public access to information.
 - A significant number of youth are diverted away from the juvenile justice system, often into alternative programs.
 - Criminal Justice System

- Open public access to all information is required.
 - Law enforcement exercises discretion to divert offenders out of the criminal justice system.
- Regarding law enforcement, the juvenile justice system and the criminal justice system are similar in the following ways:
 - Jurisdiction involves the full range of criminal behavior.
 - Constitutional and procedural safeguards exist.
 - Both reactive and proactive approaches are used.
 - Community policing strategies are employed.
- Regarding intake—prosecution, the juvenile justice system and the criminal justice system differ in the following ways:
 - Juvenile Justice System
 - In many instances, juvenile court intake not the prosecutor, decides what cases to file.
 - The decision to file a petition for court action is based on both social and legal factors.
 - A significant portion of cases are diverted from formal case processing.
 - Intake or the prosecutor diverts cases from formal processing to services operated by the juvenile court, prosecutor's office, or outside agencies.
 - Criminal Justice System
 - Plea bargaining is common.
 - The prosecution decision is based largely on legal facts.
 - Prosecution is valuable in building history for subsequent offenses.
 - Prosecution exercises discretion to withhold charges or divert offenders out of the criminal justice system.
- Regarding intake/prosecution, the juvenile justice system and the criminal justice system are similar in the following ways:
 - Probable cause must be established.
 - The prosecutor acts on behalf of the State.
- Regarding detention—jail/lockup, the juvenile justice system and the criminal justice system differ in the following ways:
 - Juvenile Justice System
 - Juveniles may be detained for their own protection or the community's protection.
 - Juveniles may not be confined with adults unless there is "sight and sound separation".
 - Criminal Justice System

- Accused individuals have the right to apply for bond/bail release.
- Regarding detention/jail, the juvenile justice system and the criminal justice system are similar in the following ways:
 - Accused offenders may be held in custody to ensure their appearance in court.
 - Detention alternatives of home or electronic detention are used.
- Regarding adjudication/conviction, the juvenile justice system and the criminal justice system differ in the following ways:
 - Juvenile Justice System
 - Juvenile court proceedings are “quasi-civil” (not criminal) and maybe confidential.
 - If guilt is established, the youth is adjudicated delinquent regardless of offense.
 - Right to jury trial is not afforded in all states.
 - Criminal Justice System
 - Defendants have a constitutional right to a jury trial.
 - Guilt must be established on individual offenses charged for conviction.
 - All proceedings are open.
- Regarding adjudication/conviction, the juvenile justice system and the criminal justice system are similar in the following ways:
 - Standard of “proof beyond a reasonable doubt” is required.
 - Rights to be represented by an attorney, to confront witnesses, and to remain silent are afforded.
 - Appeals to a higher court are allowed.
 - Experimentation with specialized courts (i.e., drug courts, gun courts) is under way.
- Regarding disposition—sentencing, the juvenile justice system and the criminal justice system differ in the following ways:
 - Juvenile Justice System
 - Disposition decisions are based on individual and social factors, offense severity, and youth’s offense history.
 - Dispositional philosophy includes a significant rehabilitation component.
