Essay (5)

Q76. [Essay] · BLOOM'S: Apply

Yasmin is fined by the Environmental Protection Agency for violation of an agency regulation. Yasmin argues that the regulation conflicts with the U.S. Constitution. If there is a conflict, discuss whether the regulation is valid and why or why not. Also discuss the impact of your analysis on this situation.

Suggested answer: The U.S. Constitution is the supreme law of the land. A law in violation of the Constitution, no matter what its source, will be declared unconstitutional and will not be enforced. Thus, the regulation does not have priority over the Constitution. The regulation would be declared unconstitutional and would be invalid. As a result, Yasmin would not have to pay the fine.

Q77. [Essay] · BLOOM'S: Apply

Discuss the doctrine known as stare decisis. What does this doctrine have to do with the American legal system?

Suggested answer: In a common law legal system, past judicial decisions are binding in current disputes with similar facts. This feature of the common law, which is the basis of the American legal system, is unique because, unlike the law in other legal systems, it is judge-made law. Within the common law system, when possible, judges attempt to be consistent and to base their decisions on the principles suggested by earlier cases. The body of principles and doctrines that form the common law emerged over time as judges applied the principles announced in earlier cases to subsequent legal controversies.

*The practice of deciding cases with reference to former decisions, or precedents—the cornerstone of the American legal system—is called the doctrine of stare decisis. Under this doctrine, judges are obligated to follow the precedents established within their jurisdictions. This helps courts to be more efficient and makes the law more stable and predictable.*

Q78. [Essay] · BLOOM'S: Apply

The legal system in Illinois has two pending cases that involve different issues regarding stare decisis. First, Briggs v. Jones, an earlier Illinois case, decided a computer software issue based on now-outdated technology. A current case, Alston v. Rawls, involves a similar issue. In a second case, Randall v. Palmer, a technology issue is presented that has never been decided because the technology is new. Is the court in Alston v. Rawls required to follow the holding in Briggs v. Jones? Why or why not? In Randall v. Palmer, what may the court base its decision on in the absence of any controlling precedent?

Suggested answer: The practice of deciding cases with reference to former decisions (or precedents)—the cornerstone of the American legal system—is called the doctrine of stare decisis. Under this doctrine, judges are obligated to follow the precedents established within their jurisdictions. This helps courts to be more efficient and makes the law more stable and predictable. Although courts are obligated to follow precedents, sometimes a court will depart from the rule of precedent. If a court decides that a precedent is simply incorrect or that technological or social changes have rendered the precedent inapplicable, the court may rule contrary to the precedent, and this is likely in the first scenario here. Regarding the second scenario, occasionally, courts must decide cases for which no precedents exist, called cases of first impression. When deciding cases of first impression, courts often look at persuasive authorities. A persuasive authority is a legal authority that a court may consult for guidance but that is not binding on the court. A court may consider precedents from other jurisdictions, for instance, although those precedents are not binding. A court may also consider legal principles and policies underlying previous court decisions or existing statutes. Additionally, a court might look at fairness, social values and customs, and public policy (governmental policy based on widely held societal values). Federal courts can also look at unpublished opinions (those not intended for publication in a printed legal reporter) as sources of persuasive authority.

Q79. [Essay] · BLOOM'S: Analyze

Local government in Clare Township passes a noise ordinance. The Environmental Protection Agency passes a regulation regarding air pollution. The U.S. Constitution is amended to allow sixteen-year-olds the right to vote. The Michigan state constitution is amended to allow women the right to reproductive health care under a right to privacy. A federal statute is passed that requires all medical marijuana dispensaries to pay 40 percent of their profits to the federal government. List these laws and regulations in hierarchical order and explain the reasons for your listing.

Suggested answer: Primary sources of American law include the following: The U.S. Constitution and the constitutions of the various states, statutory law—including laws passed by Congress, state legislatures, and local governing bodies, regulations created by administrative agencies and case law (court decisions). The U.S. Constitution is the basis of all law in the United States. It provides a framework for statutes and regulations and thus is the supreme law of the land. A law in violation of the U.S. Constitution, if challenged, will be declared unconstitutional and will not be enforced, no matter what its source. Unless it conflicts with the U.S. Constitution or a federal law, a state constitution is supreme within that state's borders. Thus, the amendment to the U.S. Constitution is the highest law here, and the amendment to the Ohio state constitution is the next highest law here. Laws enacted by legislative bodies at any level of government make up the body of law generally referred to as statutory law. Statutory law also includes local ordinances. An ordinance is a regulation passed by a municipal or county governing unit to deal with matters not covered by federal or state law. A federal statute, of course, applies to all states. A state statute, in contrast, applies only within the state's borders. State laws thus may vary from state to state. No federal statute may violate the U.S. Constitution, and no state statute or local ordinance may violate the U.S. Constitution or the relevant state constitution. Thus, the next highest law is the federal statute and then, the local government noise ordinance. Finally, administrative law consists of the rules, orders, and decisions of administrative agencies. Rules issued by various administrative agencies affect almost every aspect of a business's operations. The EPA regulation is thus the law at the end of this list.

What is the difference between civil law and criminal law?

Suggested answer: The huge body of law is broken into several classifications. An important classification divides law into civil law and criminal law. Civil law spells out the rights and duties that exist between persons and between citizens and their governments. In a civil case, one party tries to make the other party comply with a duty or pay for the damage caused by a failure to do so. An example is contract law.

Criminal law has to do with a wrong committed against the public as a whole. Criminal acts are prohibited by local, state, or federal government statutes. In a criminal case, the government seeks to impose a penalty (a monetary penalty and/or imprisonment) on an allegedly guilty person. Criminal law defines crimes and subjects criminals to punishment.
